Oscillatory "Temporal Sampling" and Developmental Dyslexia: Towards an Over-Arching Theoretical Framework Usha Goswami, Alan Power, Marie Lallier, Andrea Facchetti, 2015-04-01 Children with developmental dyslexia fail to acquire efficient reading and spelling skills despite adequate tuition and an absence of overt sensory and or neural deficits Learning to read and spell requires linguistic skills auditory skills and visual skills Oscillatory temporal sampling theory links the development of sensory and linguistic processes The auditory system samples acoustic information at different temporal rates which for speech processing suggests that temporal information encoded by delta theta and gamma oscillations is bound together in the final speech percept Temporal sampling theory proposed a possible deficit in dyslexia in auditory sampling of the speech signal at syllable relevant rates 10 Hz delta and theta This would hypothetically affect prosodic development prior to reading and syllable based parsing which would affect efficient linguistic skills and consequently reading development across languages The visual system also samples information in the visuo spatial field In theory atypical visual oscillatory sampling could therefore be related to some of the visual features of developmental dyslexia In this special issue we bring together visual and auditory sensory processing studies around the general theme of oscillatory temporal sampling Contributors were encouraged to discuss their findings within a temporal sampling perspective The resulting studies cover a wide range of sensory processes with findings both supporting and contradicting the theory It is also important to note that studies covered a wide range of languages and that the behavioural manifestations of a sampling impairment may differ both with language and over the course of development Nevertheless it is encouraging to see such diverse findings considered within a single theoretical framework even if at the same time it is apparent that an over arching theoretical framework encompassing both visual and auditory deficits in dyslexia is yet to be achieved

Attributes of Success in a Challenging Information Processing Environment, 2007 By using graph theoretic techniques to compare the information processing behaviors of three groups of mid level working professionals as each undertakes a series of four complex interdependent computer mediated decision making exercises this thesis explores 1 the relationship between network centrality and individual performance and 2 the relationship between network density and group performance The results of this exploration though mostly inconclusive call into question both intuition and social network analysis literature It is predicted that centrality in a network correlates positively with high performance among individuals but statistical analysis of data collected during controlled experimentation reveal an almost negligible relationship It is also hypothesized that high density groups outperform low density groups but density and performance are found to correlate in exactly the opposite direction as density increases group performance decreases As an explanation this thesis proposes that as network density increases actors require more time to process and respond to incoming information In as much as central actors possess a greater number of edges i e communication linkages to others this thesis also argues that centrality in a network has costs as well as benefits Further experimentation is needed to test the validity of these conjectures and bring better understanding to Organization Theory Social Network Analysis and Information Processing networks Proceedings, 1972 Assessment of Competencies in Educational Contexts Eckhard Klieme, Detlev Leutner, Johannes Hartig, 2008 Covers theoretical psychometric and practical issues related to the assessment of competencies in educational and vocational settings This book is suitable for researchers interested in theoretical and psychometric background of assessment and for readers interested in practical aspects of computer based assessment and evaluation The Information Process Robert William Desmond, 1978 The content ranges from the invention of the alphabet paper and ink and the printing press to the perfection of the mass communication system Supplementing a description of how news was gathered and disseminated through the centuries is a detailed account of the great advances that came in the nineteenth century These advances relate to the growth of newspaper enterprises the development of telegraph cable telephone and wireless the creation of news agencies and the appearance of photography From book jacket Attribution Biases, Competitive/cooperative Work Environments, and the Management Control Process Donald Joseph Barnett, 1989 Knowledge Organization, 1996
