

Ten tips on how to talk to your child

1 Your child will more likely come to you with his problems or private feelings if you make a point of listening to him. Children learn by example. They'll learn to listen if you listen to them.

2 Look your child in the eyes when you're talking. Stand or sit down. Become your child's size. Then your child won't feel so small and you will feel closer to each other.

3 Speak to your child in a calm and quiet voice. If he's done something wrong, take him aside and try to correct him with a calm, not tense or mad voice. This way your child won't be frightened or angry, and will listen to you better.

4 Practice listening and talking. Talk to your children about school and their friends. Talk about what you see on TV, hear on the radio, or do during the day. Ask them questions about things they're interested in and have them explain details to you.

5 Respect your child and use a polite tone of voice. Don't talk down to him. Respect that what he talks about is important to him. Show that you care about his interests.

6 Notice when children and teens behave well. Praise them for cooperating with you or their brothers or sisters. Praise them for doing little things that are so easy to take for granted.

* All are worth to both boys and girls

7 Use certain words that invite children to say more about a situation or their feelings. These words include: "I see," "Really?," "No kidding," "Tell me more," "Mrs...James," "Say that again. I want to be sure I understand you."

8 Praise builds a child's confidence and encourages more talking. Ignoring your children or using mean words hurts them and makes them think they aren't good enough.

9 Children are never too old to be told that you love them. Saying "I love you" is important. Write it in a note so your child has a reminder she can hold on to.

10 Pay close attention when your child wants to talk to you. Don't read, watch TV, or make yourself busy with other tasks.

More good reasons to talk openly and listen well

"You're not listening" works both ways. Both kids and parents need to feel heard. Learning the right words and the best way to talk to each other takes time, practice and consistency.

Good communication with your children helps them succeed in life. It helps them develop more confidence, better self-esteem and build strong friendships.

If you're a busy parent who juggles work, school and home, try to take time out every day for your children, no matter what. Give them a minimum of 20 minutes a day. Sit on the floor and give them your undivided attention. Your dishes, your phone calls, and your errands all can wait.

If you talk and listen well to your child, it:

- teaches your child that it's safe to come to you with problems or feelings
- helps you learn the right words to say to your child during difficult situations
- allows you to help your child when there's trouble
- helps your child know that you mean what you say
- helps your child learn that you have time no matter what
