Tom Ambrose

The transport secretary was accused of "advocating fire and rehire" tactics after he warned that the changes sought by rail companies could be imposed on workers.

Grant Shapps told Sky News yesterday that he could enact legislation referred to as a "section 188" to force through some of the measures at the heart of the current strikes.

"If we can't get this settled in the way that we are proposing, which is [asking unions], 'please put the deal

The TSSA said section 188 of the Trade Union and Labour Relations Act is a duty requiring employers to consult trade union representatives, not a mechanism for imposing unilateral change.

Yesterday, Rail, Maritime and Transport union (RMT) workers walked out over issues including jobs and pensions, halting most tube services in London.

There was also disruption to bus services in west and south-west London and parts of Surrey as a result of a strike yesterday and today by London bus drivers who are members of Unite, in a separate dispute over pay.
