Research on the Strategy of Multinational Enterprises Marina Dabic, 2015 Over decades research on multinational enterprises MNEs strategies has been anchored in internalization theory Strongly grounded in transaction cost economics to explain foreign market entry it hardly explains how MNEs can build and sustain a competitive advantage Thus this paper aims at understanding how the nature of strategic thinking has influenced the research in the field of MNEs strategy A content analysis of 1 116 papers was conducted The intellectual structure and dynamics of research to date are provided without losing sight of the key foundations of strategy and strategic management The links between human capital and knowledge are the factors on which to underpin the explanation of the MNEs strategies and support the coevolving theory This theory is a promising avenue of research under the umbrella of RBV and KBV approaches The context dependency of strategy implies that different contexts require different approaches Accordingly we provide insights for future research by combining main schools of strategy thought The Regional Multinationals Alan M.
