

THE CHILDREN OF HERACLES

Scene: A temple of Zeus at Marathon, on the north-east coast of Attica, the front of the temple, entrance, on which old Pelops and the young sons of Heracles have taken refuge as suppliants.

PELOPUS

Since long ago I've been a victim of affliction as Heracles once visited this island sacred home, while that same Pelops tried to murder him as guests to please his city and I long since to deal with good only to himself.

That I know from experience, not heathen.

I myself could have lived quietly in Argos, but then came war and family duty to war that was more than shared with Heracles

120 in his many labours, while he was still with us.

And now that he dwells in Marathon, I long his children have made my refuge and try to protect them — though meeting prosecution myself.

For when their father left the earth behind,

Demeter's husband at first he held me all:

but we engaged. In we have been our city but kept our lives. In a warlike manner still, leaving from one man's household to another's.

For, setting off our wife and son, Demeter's 130 now fit to suffer and further wrongs as we whenever he heard we'd settled ourselves somewhere, he sent heralds to demand we be arraigned and delivered from the land that'd put us that Argos was no small city, as I read of this, and that he himself was prosperous and successful.

And they, looking at the hostesses as my guest and at the children here, no small and without a father, they ended up giving us quiet to the stranger guest — no one among her householders there found.

140 For myself, I'm a fellow with the orphic children, a fellow mother with these orphans, but now I refuse to betray them, lest people might say,

"I could have had the children's father's man alive,

I take his property and protect his heirs, even though he's a member of their family."

With no place of our own in all of Greece, and no name, to Marathon and its neighbouring lands,
