The Dark Houses:

Dark House John Sedgwick, 2000-07-25 Don't you ever wonder about them the people around you Who are they the strangers you pass the strangers who pass you at the supermarket at the mall on the road Take that dark Nissan in your rearview mirror Just another pair of headlights on your stretch of highway you think Now indulge your imagination Who is he Where is he headed A traveling salesman you'd guess or maybe a suburbanite going home to his family after a long day at the office After all you and he are just a random pair of commuters whose lives have momentarily converged right You adjust your mirror He's still there a lone male late thirties Rather handsome actually And his eyes are on you And his eyes are on you And they stay on you Meet Edward Rollins scion of one of Boston's more notable families Securely yet unhappily employed at one of the city's finest investment houses he is a man of means and of secrets What began as a lark a way of unwinding has become for Rollins an obsession Each night armed with a hand held tape recorder he randomly picks a car and follows it to a destination cataloging the habits and peculiarities of its driver imagining from those details the sort of life that might have been his But one night changes everything Trailing a car to a remote suburb Rollins follows it to a mystery involving a vanished heiress a mystery to which he unwittingly holds the key In his desperate isolation he turns to Marj Simmons a young colleague he barely knows To find the truth they must unlock the secrets of Rollins's own past a search that could free him from his own dark house of despair A harrowing tension riddled literary thriller that echoes the storytelling power of Frederick Busch and Ian McEwan The Dark House heralds the arrival of a major talent

Office of Experiment Stations, 1892 Home in British Working-Class Fiction Nicola Wilson, 2016-03-09 Home in British Working Class Fiction offers a fresh take on British working class writing that turns away from a masculinist work based understanding of class in favour of home gender domestic labour and the family kitchen As Nicola Wilson shows the history of the British working classes has often been written from the outside with observers looking into the world of the inhabitants Here Wilson engages with the long cultural history of this gaze and asks how home is represented in the writing of authors who come from a working class background Her book explores the depiction of home as a key emotional and material site in working class writing from the Edwardian period through to the early 1990s Wilson presents new readings of classic texts including The Ragged Trousered Philanthropists Love on the Dole and Saturday Night and Sunday Morning analyzing them alongside works by authors including James Hanley Walter Brierley Lewis Grassie Gibbon Buchi Emecheta Pat Barker James Kelman and the rediscovered ex mill girl novelist Ethel Carnie Holdsworth Wilson's broad understanding of working class writing allows her to incorporate figures typically ignored in this context as she demonstrates the importance of home's role in the making and expression of class feeling and identity Report of the Tenement House Committee as Authorized by Chapter 479 of the Laws of 1894 New York (State).
