The Sea Of Life:

Salt Water: The Sea Life and Adventures of Neil D'Arcy the Midshipman William Henry Giles Kingston, 2020-09-28
The sea the sea if not my mother has been my nurse and anything but a dry one from the earliest days of my recollection I was born within the sound of old ocean s surges I dabbled in salt water before I could run and I have floated on salt water and have been well sprinkled with it too from that time to the present It never occurred to me indeed that I could be anything but a sailor In my innocence I pictured a life on the ocean wave as the happiest allowed to mortals and little did I wot of all the bumpings and thumpings the blows and the buffetings I was destined to endure in the course of it Yet even had I expected them I feel very certain they would not have changed my wishes No no I was mightily mistaken with regard to the romance of the thing I own but had I to begin life again with all its dangers and hardships still I would choose the ocean for my home the glorious navy of England for my profession But now for my antecedents I will not trouble the reader with many of them I was born at the family seat in the south of Ireland My mother died while I was very young and my father Colonel D Arcy who had seen much service in the army and had been severely wounded after a lingering illness followed her to the grave During this time I was committed to the charge of Larry Harrigan the butler and family factotum and in truth I desired no better companion for well did I love the old man He was a seaman every inch of him from his cherished pigtail to the end of the timber toe on which he had long stumped through the world He had been coxswain to my maternal grandfather a captain in the navy who was killed in action Larry had gone to sea with him as a lad and they had seldom been separated A few minutes before his commander in the moment of victory lost his life Larry had his leg shot away and on being paid off he repaired to where my mother s family were residing When my father married he offered the old seaman an asylum beneath his roof He certainly did not eat the bread of idleness there for no one about the place was more generally useful There was nothing he could not do or make and in spite of his loss of a limb he was as active as most people possessed with the usual complement of supporters
