

Were these policies to be implemented at once, there would be not much of a change in short run aggregate supply. Policy 1 causes an increase, policy 2 causes a smaller but still significant increase and policy 3 has a very small impact relative to the other two (in short-run aggregate supply); that impact being a minor drop. These policies all being implemented at once, however, would cause a very large increase in aggregate demand ( $AD \rightarrow AD1$ ). This would result in a lot of demand-pull inflation, and would likely be hard to control without degrading other factors of life such as wages and investment potential. To counteract this large spike in inflation, I would propose increasing imports. Not only does this increase supply, preventing much of cost-push inflation, but it would also reduce demand ( $c+i+g+(x-m)$ ). Increasing imports will also cause deflation, and the amount of commodities getting imported can also easily be controlled and regulated.

There is also a large effect on the long run aggregate supply ( $LRAS \rightarrow LRAS1$ ) caused by these, as all of them increase it significantly. This is not too much of a problem, as there will be a few years beforehand where the government will already know of the increase in aggregate supply, and will be able to prepare for it. This would possibly be in the form of increasing demand in future to balance that out, such as cutting taxes, or introducing a policy that reduces supply to a controlled level. Either way, there is a large increase in LRAS, but it won't pose a major threat to the stability of the economy.

TASK 4:

Employment Definition:

Employment is the amount of people in the population that are involved in the production and distribution of goods and services and are getting paid for it. The levels of employment are directly connected to aggregate supply, as the more people working that there are, the more goods and services can be produced. Employment could also be used as a measure of efficiency of the population. Employment is essential to the circulation of currency, as workers are paid by organisations and that money is then spend by consumers/employees that is then given from those organisations to more workers, and so forth. High rates of employment signify higher rates of efficiency, whereas low rates mean a lower productivity (and in turn aggregate supply).

Current State of Employment in NZ (Pre COVID-19)

As of late 2019, the employment rate stood at 67.5%. This is among the highest the rate has been in history, reaching a peak in late 2018 at 68%. This rate measures the percentage of people that are working over 30 hours a week and are above 16. This is approximately 3/4 of the country helping the economy. If New Zealand were to maximise this and have 100% of people working, it would move the position on the PPF curve outwards, signifying a higher production rate.

Feedback Economics Robert Y. Cavana, Brian C. Dangerfield, Oleg V. Pavlov, Michael J. Radzicki, I. David Wheat, 2021-06-30 This book approaches economic problems from a systems thinking and feedback perspective. By introducing system dynamics methods including qualitative and quantitative techniques and computer simulation models, the respective contributions apply feedback analysis and dynamic simulation modeling to important local, national, and global economics issues and concerns. Topics covered include an introduction to macro modeling using a system dynamics framework, a system dynamics translation of the Phillips machine, a re-examination of classical economic theories from a feedback perspective, analyses of important social, ecological, and resource issues, the development of a biophysical economics module for global modelling, contributions to monetary and financial economics, analyses of macroeconomic growth, income distribution, and alternative theories of well-being, and a re-examination of scenario macro modeling. The contributions also examine the philosophical differences between the economics and system dynamics communities in an effort to bridge existing gaps and compare methods. Many models and other supporting information are provided as online supplementary files. Consequently, the book appeals to students and scholars in economics as well as to practitioners and policy analysts interested in using systems thinking and system dynamics modeling to understand and improve economic systems around the world. Clearly, there is much space for more collaboration between the advocates of post-Keynesian economics and system dynamics More generally I would like to recommend this book to all scholars and practitioners interested in exploring the interface and synergies between economics system dynamics and feedback thinking Comments in the Foreword by Marc Lavoie Emeritus Professor University of Ottawa and University of Sorbonne Paris Nord The Standard Periodical Directory ,1993 Print Media Editorial Calendars ,1988-11 Economics Study Guide NCEA Year 13 Maggie Williamson,2006-08-01 Resources in Education ,1982 Year 12 Economics Exam Preparation Stuart Douce,2009-01-01 Who's who in American Education ,1990 National Union Catalog ,1982 National Union Catalog ,1982 ,1983 NCEA Level 3 Economics Revision Guide 2008 Really Useful Resources,2008-01
