Re-Inventing the Postcolonial (in the) Metropolis Cecile Sandten, Annika Bauer, 2016-09-27 The notion of the postcolonial metropolis has gained prominence in the last two decades both within and beyond postcolonial studies Disciplines such as sociology and urban studies however have tended to focus on the economic inequalities class disparities and other structural and formative aspects of the postcolonial metropolises that are specific to Western conceptions of the city at large It is only recently that the depiction of postcolonial metropolises has been addressed in the writings of Suketu Mehta Chris Abani Amit Chaudhuri Salman Rushdie Aravind Adiga Helon Habila Sefi Atta and Zakes Mda among others Most of these works probe the urban specifics and physical and cultural topographies of postcolonial cities while highlighting their agential capacity to defy appropriate and abrogate the superimposition of theories of Western modernity and urbanism These ASNEL Papers are all concerned with the idea of the postcolonial in the metropolis from various disciplinary viewpoints as drawn from a great range of cityscapes spread out over five continents The essays explore on the one hand ideas of spatial subdivision and inequality political repression social discrimination economic exploitation and cultural alienation and on the other the possibility of transforming reinventing and reconfiguring the postcolonial condition in and through literary texts and visual narratives In this context the volume covers a broad spectrum of theoretical and thematic approaches to postcolonial and metropolitan topographies and their depictions in writings from Australia and New Zealand South Africa South Asia and greater Asia as well as the UK addressing issues such as modernity and market economies but also caste class and social and linguistic aspects At the same time they reflect on the postcolonial metropolis and postcolonialism in the metropolis by concentrating on an urban imaginary which turns on notions of spatial subdivision and inequality political repression social discrimination economic exploitation and cultural alienation as the continuing postcolonial condition

Victorian Review, 2008 Nineteenth-century Literature, 2005 The Harmony of the Homeland Carroll Clayton Savant, 2015 In 1977 R Murray Schafer created the field of soundscape studies by examining how the music sounds and images that surround us shape an understanding of our world Since then soundscape scholars have applied elements of Schafer's theories to other disciplines such as sociology literature or urban planning to create interdisciplinary sound studies investigations Many of these applications are flawed as they study only the performative aspects of music and sound In this dissertation I will avoid these shortcomings by creating a new methodology that fuses soundscape studies with musical affect theories to prove that the communicative nature of music and sounds encode extra musical messages of national ideology that emotionally tie listeners to the locations and identities of these sounds Throughout this study I will explore and analyze how the soundscapes of nineteenth century English country and urban life created by George Eliot and her high to late Victorian contemporaries Thomas Hardy and George Gissing provide a symbolically sensory illustration of Victorian life In examining these soundscapes within the context of Victorian social history aesthetic theory and nineteenth century musicology I will argue that the Victorians were aware of how the representations of sound contributed to a definition of national character and identity In my study I will isolate the locations found in these authors novels by contrasting the portrayal of the late Victorian city with the representation of the historical English countryside In distinguishing the two locations I will uncover how the sounds that enveloped Britons affected their understanding of identity and belonging Similarly I will turn to philosophers and aesthetes who investigated the communicative and affective powers of music to express non musical ideals In this regard my study will bridge the disciplines of musicology soundscape studies and literary and Victorian studies By recognizing how these authors turned to the symbolic sensory depictions of location to mediate the differences between life in the city and the country I will show that their representations of Victorian soundscapes created a definition of English character and identity
