Discover the gangs that lurked down the dark alleys of 19th century Britain

Written by Dr. Richard Bates

In 1841, a young man named William Miller and his gang were living in one of the most notorious slum areas in London, the East End. Miller was a street boy, a child who had been abandoned by his parents and was now being raised by the street people around him. Miller was a member of a street gang that had remained the leading force in the East End for decades. The gang was known as the 'Miller's' and was made up of some of the most notorious individuals in the area.
