The Carbonels Charlotte M. Yonge,2005-04-01 Little Mary Carbonel was not the worse for all the agitations from which indeed she had been so carefully shielded but her mother was sadly broken down by all she had undergone and likewise by mortification at the whole conduct of the Uphill people After all the years that she and her husband and sisters had striven for them it was very hard to find that so very few would exert themselves for their protection and that so many would even turn against them It was hard to make allowance for the bewilderment of slow minds for sheer cowardice and for the instinct of going along with one s own class of people She and Sophy prayed that they might forgive the people but it was impossible just then not to feel that there was a good deal to forgive and Captain Caiger was always telling them that all their trouble came in trying to help the good for nothing people
