Teacher and Student Perceptions John M. Levine, Margaret C. Wang, 1983

Student Feedback on Teaching in Schools Wolfram Rollett, Hannah Bijlsma, Sebastian Röhl, 2021-08-12 This open access book provides a comprehensive and informative overview of the current state of research about student perceptions of and student feedback on teaching After presentation of a new student feedback process model evidence concerning the validity and reliability of student perceptions of teaching quality is discussed This is followed by an overview of empirical research on the effects of student feedback on teachers and instruction in different contexts as well as on factors promoting the successful implementation of feedback in schools In summary the findings emphasize that student perceptions of teaching quality can be a valid and reliable source of feedback for teachers The effectiveness of student feedback on teaching is significantly related to its use in formative settings and to a positive feedback culture within schools In addition it is argued that the effectiveness of student feedback depends very much on the support for teachers when making use of the feedback As this literature review impressively documents teachers in their work and ultimately students in their learning can benefit substantially from student feedback on teaching in schools This book reviews what we know about student feedback to teachers It is detailed and it is a pleasure to read To have these chapters in one place and from those most up to date with the research literature and doing the research is a gift John Hattie

Relations Between Student Perceptions of Teacher and Parent Expectations, Student Motivation, Learning, and Achievement Asma Shah, 2016 Research on the impact of expectancy on achievement is mostly conducted from the teachers or parents perspectives However research has also found that students cognitive emotional and social awareness can significantly alter and direct their behaviour within their learning environments Despite the importance of student perceptions in a recent survey by the Ministry of Education students indicated their perspectives in class to be a crucial yet absent element of effective learning Focusing on students as part of the solution the current study assessed the relations between students perceptions of parent and teacher expectations and student motivation learning and achievement The study also explored students views on learning improvements within class and home contexts A concurrent mixed methods design was adopted Likert scale survey ratings from 917 Year 7 and 8 students were analysed Perceptions of teacher and parent expectations were predictive of student self efficacy conceptions of learning deep and strategic learning approaches and achievement Further perceptions of teacher expectations emerged as the stronger predictor of the dependent variables Students who perceived parents and teachers as having high expectations scored highly in student motivation and learning compared to students who perceived parents and teachers as having lower expectations Moreover high perceptions of teacher expectations emerged as having a buffering effect on low perceptions of parent expectations Thematic analysis of students responses revealed teacher expectations supportive student adult relationships awareness of student perspectives and quality instructions and feedback as the most prominent influences on student learning The study urges formation of school level systems to promote students perceptions of learning and teaching within class Further the study reinforces fostering parental involvement in the form of high expectations and autonomy oriented learning involvement at home Educational implications of the findings are discussed
