

The Ultimate Measures of Health

Existing public health programs have been designed with an emphasis on preventing people from becoming sick through various behavioral and environmental interventions. While these programs have been successful in reducing the burden of disease, they have not been able to prevent people from becoming sick in the first place. This is because the current public health system is based on a model of disease prevention that focuses on preventing people from becoming sick, rather than on preventing people from becoming sick in the first place. This model of disease prevention is based on the idea that people become sick because of their behavior and environment, and that by changing their behavior and environment, they can prevent themselves from becoming sick. This model of disease prevention is based on the idea that people become sick because of their behavior and environment, and that by changing their behavior and environment, they can prevent themselves from becoming sick.
