The Seymour Cray Era of Supercomputers Boelie Elzen, Donald MacKenzie, 2025-01-22 This book describes the development and use of supercomputers in the period 1960 1996 a time that can be called the Seymour Cray Era For more than three decades Cray's computer designs were seen as the yardstick against which all other efforts were measured Initially this yardstick was sheer computing speed However the supercomputer world gradually became more complex and other factors became equally important The initial development of supercomputers was commissioned and financed by the Los Alamos and Lawrence Livermore National Laboratories which had huge computational needs in connection with nuclear weapons development The computers designed by Cray satisfied those needs while these computers were also sold to a few dozen other big research organizations and weather agencies From the 1980s a variety of companies started to compete with the Cray designs by offering supercomputers that used a new architectural approach MPP massively parallel processing This new architecture based on using tens of thousands of relatively simple microprocessors subsequently began to dominate high performance computing and marked the end of the Seymour Cray Era This book is important reading for anyone working in the area of high performance computing providing essential historical context for the work of a legendary pioneer and the computers he became famous for designing It will also be valuable to students of computing history and more generally to readers interested in the history of science and technology For advanced students the book illustrates how innovation in its very essence is a socio technical process not just a matter of developing the best technology but also of making appropriate choices concerning the interaction of human and technical factors in product design reputation for themselves in a very short time From the revolutionary and innovative Z1 of the late 1980s to the beautiful and exclusive Z8 of more recent times via the popular Z3 and its controversial replacement the Z4 the family has made BMW's name in the increasingly competitive sports car market

History of Nordic Computing 2 John Impagliazzo, Timo Järvi, Petri Paju, 2009-09-19 The First Conference on the History of Nordic Computing HiNC1 was organized in Trondheim in June 2003 The HiNC1 event focused on the early years of computing that is the years from the 1940s through the 1960s although it formally extended to year 1985 In the preface of the proceedings of HiNC1 Janis Bubenko Jr John Impagliazzo and Arne S Iyberg describe well the peculiarities of early Nordic computing 1 While developing hardware was a necessity for the first professionals quite soon the computer became an industrial product Computer scientists among others grew increasingly interested in programming and application software Progress in these areas from the 1960s to the 1980s was experienced as astonishing The developments during these decades were taken as the focus of HiNC2 During those decades computers arrived to every branch of large and medium sized businesses and the users of the computer systems were no longer only computer specialists but also people with other main duties Compared to the early years of computing before 1960 where the number of computer projects and applications was small capturing a holistic view of the history between the 1960s and the 1980s is considerably more difficult The HiNC2 conference attempted to help in this endeavor
