Brauth,William S. Hall,Robert J. Dooling,1991 Plasticity of Development brings together innovative current research on the nature nurture issue and presents new comparative approaches to epigenetic processes processes in which environmental signals act upon the genome Plasticity of Development brings together innovative current research by Jerome Kagan Stephen Suomi Sandra Scarr Patricia Kuhl Peter Mader and Pasko Rakic on the nature nurture issue and presents new comparative approaches to epigenetic processes processes in which environmental signals act upon the genome from the fields of child psychology animal learning brain development and psycholinguistics The studies address important issues concerning continuity of developmental processes the nature of biological and environmental signals controlling epigenetic mechanisms and the adaptive significance of developmental pathways An introduction discusses theories of self organizing systems including the important concept of canalization which is taken up in chapters by Mader Rakic Kagan and Suomi Central to the study of development canalization encompasses the idea that genetic information supports a self organizing process that is guided by environmental input but that also provides a set of buffers against abnormal environmental and even genetic information Kagan and Suomi describe continuity in developmental processes in humans and in Rhesus monkeys revealing that in at least one important personality characteristic response to challenge and stress the behaviors and physiological correlates are strikingly similar Scarr investigates the role of adoption and home environment on developmental continuity and shows that to a surprising extent children create the environmental niches they fill Kuhl provides additional insight into the nature of the biological and environmental signals controlling epigenetic programs through her work on the development of speech perception in human children The issue she raises of what is general and what is special in human speech perception and language development bears directly on the open versus closed teaching systems observed by Mader for oscine songbirds In the most detailed account of the biological and environmental signals controlling epigenesis Pasko Rakic describes the ontogenetic processes that produce the primate cerebral cortex

Body Representations in Action Marie Martel, 2016 To prepare and perform movements efficiently accurate action representations are necessary formalized by computational science as internal models Actions representations do not require exclusively the representation of object properties information about the body and particularly the effector such as its posture and dimension are also crucial Thus effector representations need to be updated to account for postural changes yet they do not play a prominent role in the actual models of motor control In addition updates settings of both action and body representation are presumably established ontogenetically but little is known on their developmental path First I investigated the maturation of action representation in children from 5 to 10 years of age as well as the potential differences in children with Developmental Coordination Disorder DCD Through kinematics analyses I sought to understand how children develop their ability to control their movements Second using a tool functionally extending arm length I questioned the sensory inputs for body representation plasticity in adults such as proprioception and vision Third I probed rapid body representations plasticity during the slowly changing dimensions of the body during growth To this aim I investigated in typically developing children and adolescents tool induced plasticity of the upper limb representation Finally I discuss the relationship between body representations and motor control in adults and children as despite being both related they have often times walked parallel ways
