An Accountable Source-to-source Transformation System Barbara Sue Kerns Steele, 1981 Though one is led to believe that program transformation systems which perform source to source transformations enable the user to understand and appreciate the resulting source program this is not always the case Transformations are capable of behaving and or interacting in unexpected ways The user who is interested in understanding the what's why's where's and how's of the transformation process is left without tools for discovering them I provide an initial step towards the solution of this problem in the form of an accountable source to source transformation system It carefully records the information necessary to answer such questions and provides mechanisms for the retrieval of this information It is observed that though this accountable system allows the user access to relevant facts from which he may draw conclusions further study is necessary to make the system capable of analysing these facts itself Author

The Politics of Transformation Betty H. Zisk, 1992-10-30 This book is a study of local grassroots activism in two major political areas the peace and environmental movements over a period of five years Interviews with leaders of 166 different groups in five states Massachusetts Maine New Hampshire California and Oregon supplemented by personal observation and participation in several of those groups are the foundations of this analysis The major concerns are the components of group and movement successes both short run and long run and activist group adaptations to change in the larger social and political world in light of political upheaval in Eastern Europe the Gulf War and several environmental crises that occurred during the period in question Finally Zisk focuses on the growing convergence and barriers to convergence of the movements After examining short run accomplishments Zisk concludes that most of the groups in both movements are faring poorly few of their concrete goals are achieved media attention is poor and membership growth is problematic For both movements the transformational wings those that press for basic changes use consensus decision making have few paid staff members are not doing so well as the incremental wings those seeking limited goals using traditional decision techniques employing larger staffs This book should be of interest to students and teachers of political science and sociology
