

When only a portion of the forehead is taken and the entire defect can be closed directly, there is no great advantage in leaving the muscle in that area.

SPECIAL DESIGN FOR BONE GRAFT DONOR AREA

Evans' method of harvesting the bone preserves the skin over the flap and has other advantages. E. A. White prefers the approach because of the experienced lack of such complications as bleeding, infection, contour deformity and distortion. Through a 5 to 6 cm skin incision, the skin over parietal is raised. Two oblique cuts reflect the flap of the skin over behind the coronal incision zone, and parietal is reflected from inner and outer surfaces of the flaps. Sometimes this facilitates harvesting the central bone including orbital plates if needed. Careful dissection here is taken with a cautery. After the bone has been harvested, the flap of the skin are sutured firmly together with a final suture to approximate the incised lips to the coronal incision zone.

The result is a well-healed scalp with no postoperative increase of broken hair or balding, and the patient can usually walk on the first or second postoperative day.

CALVARIAL BONE GRAFTS

The bone of the calvaria has been used for donor bone grafts but has become of little value lately especially in craniofacial surgery. The bone is usually deficient and available in large amounts of the usual by simply elevating the scalp flap more, without the need for much extra scalp covering. The outer table of skull with some cancellous bone attached is excellent for grafting the skull and facial deformities, especially at the donor site especially with an osteotomy. From a recent experience of harvesting the donor site, we noted that the donor site of the calvaria is shallow, and the bone should be protected by leaving strips of outer cortex in strategic points to give strength to the skull donor site and separation and healing have occurred.

BIB GRAFT

Lib bone grafts can be taken with impunity. If the postural curve is left intact and closed, regeneration of all bone will occur.

DONOR AREAS FOR BREAST REPAIR

The latissimus dorsi from the anterior flap is better secondary use is the back off of a second or from the 4th or 5th rib, by now because this is a good deal because when the rib is cut at its posterior right, it is partially cut of itself.
