

OVERVIEW OF URBAN TRANSPORT PLANNING

I. INTRODUCTION

INTRODUCTION

- Transportation problems vary from country to country depending on their social, economic, and political situation. The current and anticipated problems vary on the historical process of urbanization and its present stage of socio-economic development, the extent of motorization, and the level of transport technology. There is no such theory of transport planning that can be effectively applied to any transport problem, but there is an outline of comprehensive urban transport planning based on state-of-the-art practices. Its relevance to the problem of urban transport in developing countries should be studied based on the situation of a city in question.

INTRODUCTION

- The Philippines has one of the highest urbanization rates in the region. Based on UN data, 63% of the country's total population lives in urban
