

Preface

The 1999 Wisconsin Biennial presents the work of 49 artists and collaborative groups from throughout the state working in diverse media—painting, sculpture, printmaking, drawing, textile, photography, film, video, installation, performance art, and new media. The ninth Wisconsin Biennial introduces several emerging artists as well as new directions pursued by many established figures. Like the triennials and biennials before it, this major survey reflects the vitality and breadth of contemporary art in Wisconsin.

From over 2,500 applications mailed statewide, 409 artists responded. The curatorial team composed of the Madison Art Center's director Stephen Fleischman, curator of education Sheri Castelluccio, and curator of exhibitions Sara Kravovskí viewed over 2,300 slides, CD-ROMs, videos, and films. The committee then selected 99 artists for studio visits, which encompassed travel from Ashland to Kenosha and many points in between. Vital to the selection process, studio visits allow curators to come to a fuller understanding of the artist's oeuvre by looking at original work and discussing it with the artist. Following the visits and much subsequent deliberation by the curatorial committee, 41 individuals, 3 collaborative pairs, and a performance art group were chosen for the exhibition.

The Biennial is a broad overview of visual art in Wisconsin rather than a strictly thematic exhibition. Each artist has a unique approach and conceptual framework, yet in this Biennial, viewers will find similar concerns resonating among particulars. A conflation of art and science appears, as does a continuing, refined investigation of new media. Several artists explore the reconstitution of ethnicity in their work. Still others blur the boundaries between craft disciplines and traditional "high art" media, while others advance and critique theories of painting.

Through the continuing tradition of triennial exhibitions, the Madison Art Center expresses its commitment to Wisconsin artists, both established and emerging. Wisconsin is a fertile place for artistic activity. The Madison Art Center provides a critical forum for celebrating and advancing this activity on a regional, national, and international level.
