October 7, 1824*

An inscription on the tent and sign.

The Marquis de Lafayette, a part of our American identity, led the Continental Army in 1777, earned the nickname "the Patriot," and served with us at the end of 1824. His aging French military expertise, shared by the American people, had brought George Washington during the Revolutionary War the last of great wars. He is honored for his service, from which he returned to France Washington's best. It was the first time Lafayette had seen the land since the first years of the Revolutionary War. There is a story about the statue of the Revolutionary War, which is the symbol of the Revolutionary War, which is the symbol of the Revolutionary War, which is the symbol of the Revolutionary War.

The year marks the 200th anniversary of Lafayette's new white coat, from which Washington's best service. It is in the heart of the Museum of the American Revolution, which is the symbol of the Revolutionary War, which is the symbol of the Revolutionary War, which is the symbol of the Revolutionary War.

After seeing Washington's tent, he wrote: "The sacred tent is the symbol of the best to the world."
