

Twelve Tests of Character by Harry Emerson Fosdick

Harry Emerson Fosdick was one of the most eminent and often controversial of the preachers of the first half of the twentieth century. Published by Harper & Brothers Publishers, New York and London, Copyright, 1923, by The International Committee of Young Men's Christian Associations. This material was prepared for Religion Online by Ted & Winnie Brock.

Some fundamental tests of character which our new generation is tempted to forget. With many schemes for the world's salvation, everything rests back on integrity and driving power in personal character.

Foreword

Chapter 1: First Things First

Preoccupation is the most common form of failure. For the ultimate trouble with preoccupation is that it takes no account of the flight of time. So the day passes and the enriching experiences which fellowship with the Highest offers us are lost, not because we deliberately discard them, but because our time and attention are preengaged.

Chapter 2: Long Ropes and Strong Stakes

Real freedom never is obtained by mere release from old limitations; freedom is the positive substitution of inward self-control for external restraints.

Chapter 3: A High Opinion of Oneself

Anyone who starts by holding a high opinion of himself will certainly end by being ashamed of himself. Self-esteem and self-conceit are opposites. When a man thinks loftily of his life's meaning he is hard to satisfy. The real reason why so many people think too much of themselves is that they do not think enough of themselves.

Chapter 4: Seeing the Invisible

No man is the whole of himself until he has developed this capacity to see something in life besides its prose. Any man's life has been a failure when its whole story can be told in prosaic.
