French provinces and before them the independent kingdoms countships and dukedoms of B arn Navarre Foix and Roussillon are the chief and most familiar The region has been known as a touring ground for long years and mountain climbers who have tired of the monotony of the Alps have found much here to quicken their jaded appetites Besides this there is a wealth of historic fact and a quaintness of men and manners throughout all this wonderful country of infinite variety which has been little worked as yet by any but the guide book makers who deal with only the driest of details and with little approach to completeness The monuments of the region the historic and ecclesiastical shrines are numerous enough to warrant a very extended review but they have only been hinted at once and again by travellers who have usually made the round of the resorts like Biarritz Pau Luchon and Lourdes their chief reason for coming here at all Delightful as are these places and a half a dozen others whose names are less familiar the little known townlets with their historic sites such as Maz res with its Ch teau de Henri Quatre Navarreux Maul on Morlaas Nay and Bruges peopled originally by Flamands make up an itinerary quite as important as one composed of the names of places writ large in the guide books and in black type on the railway maps The region of the Pyrenees is most accessible granted it is off the regular beaten travel track The tide of Mediterranean travel is breaking hard upon its shores to day but few who are washed ashore by it go inland from Barcelona and Perpignan and so on to the old time little kingdoms of the Pyrenees Fewer still among those who go to southern France via Marseilles ever think of turning westward instead of eastward the attraction of Monte Carlo and its satellite resorts is too great The same is true of those about to do the Spanish tour which usually means Holy Week at Seville a day in the Prado and another at the Alhambra and Grenada Toledo of course and back again north to Paris or to take ship at Gibraltar En route they may have stopped at Biarritz in France or San Sebastian in Spain because it is the vogue just at present but that is all It was thus that we had known the Pyrenees We knew Pau and its ancestral ch teau of Henri Quatre had had a look at Biarritz had been to Lourdes Luchon and Tarbes and even to Caunterets and Bigorre and to Foix Carcassonne and Toulouse but those were reminiscences of days of railway travel Since that time the automobile has come to make travel in out of the way places easy and instead of having to bargain for a sorry hack to take us through the Gorges de Pierre Lys or from Perpignan to Prats de Mollo we found an even greater pleasure in finding our own way and setting our own pace This is the way to best know a country not one s own and whether we were contemplating the spot where Charlemagne and his followers met defeat at the hands of the Mountaineers or stood where the Romans erected their great troph e high above Bellegarde we were sure that we were always on the trail we would follow and were not being driven hither and thither by a cocher who classed all strangers as mere tourists and pointed out a cavern with gigantic stalagmites or a profile rock as being the chief sights of his neighbourhood when near by may have been a famous battle ground or the ch teau where was born the gallant Gaston Ph bus Really tourists using the word in its over worked sense are themselves responsible for much that is banal in the way of sights they won t follow out their own predilections but walk blindly in the trail of others whose tastes may not be their own
