

Understanding Epilepsy

What is epilepsy?

Epilepsy is a long-term condition characterized by recurrent, unprovoked seizures. It is caused by abnormal electrical activity in the brain, which can be triggered by a variety of factors, including genetic factors, brain injury, infection, and stroke. The condition is diagnosed when a person has had at least two unprovoked seizures, or one seizure followed by a high risk of having a second seizure within 10 years.

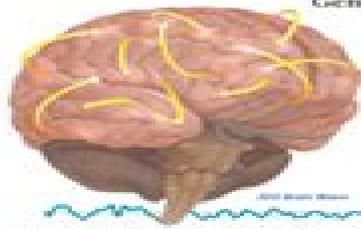

What is an epileptic seizure?

An epileptic seizure is a sudden, temporary disturbance in the brain's electrical activity. It is caused by an abnormal, excessive, and synchronized discharge of neurons in the brain. This can result in a variety of symptoms, including loss of consciousness, convulsions, and sensory changes.

Partial seizures are characterized by abnormal electrical activity in only a part of the brain. They can be further divided into simple partial seizures, which do not affect consciousness, and complex partial seizures, which do. Generalized seizures involve abnormal electrical activity in both sides of the brain and affect consciousness. They include tonic-clonic seizures, absence seizures, and atypical absence seizures.

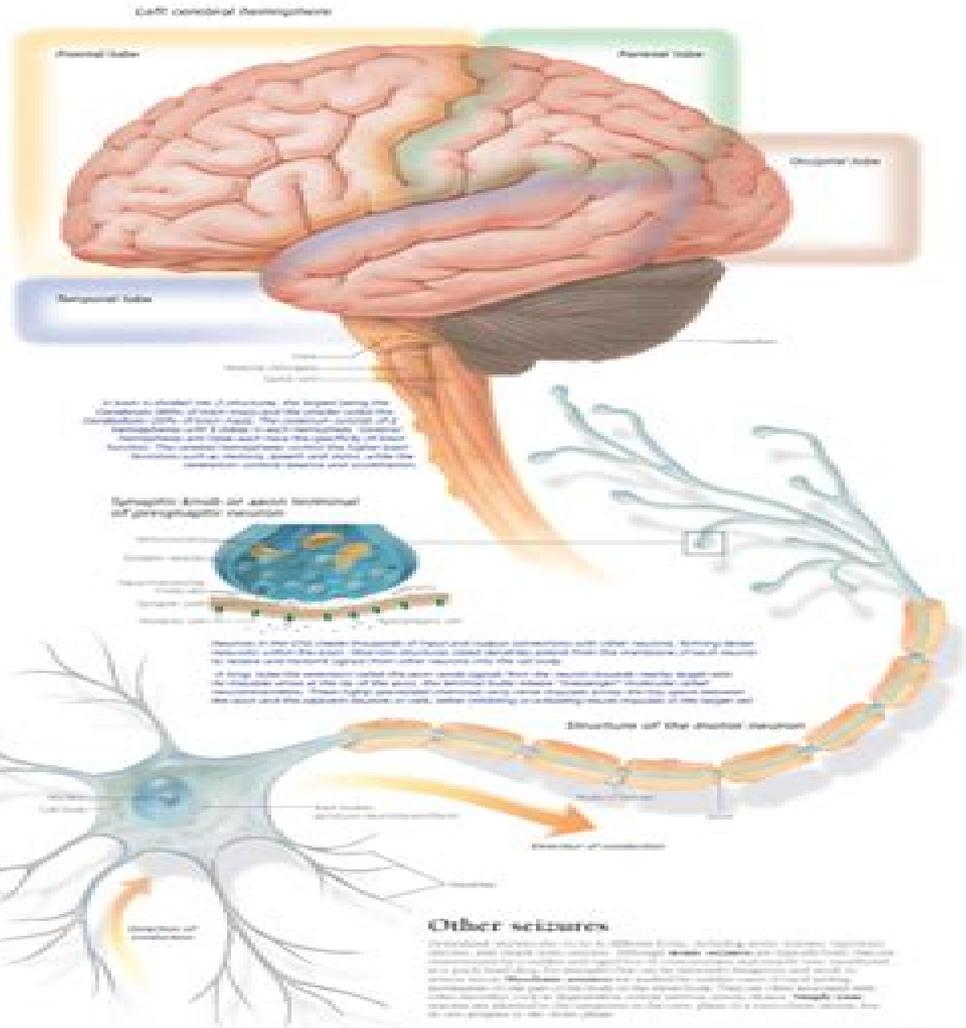

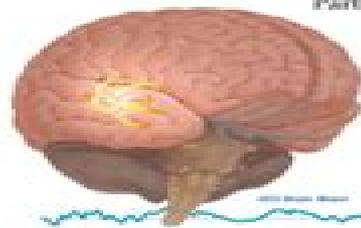

Generalized seizures

Generalized seizures involve abnormal electrical activity in both sides of the brain. They affect consciousness and can cause convulsions. There are several types of generalized seizures, including tonic-clonic seizures, absence seizures, and atypical absence seizures. Tonic-clonic seizures are the most common type of generalized seizure and are characterized by a period of stiffness (tonic phase) followed by rhythmic jerking (clonic phase). Absence seizures are characterized by a brief loss of consciousness and staring. Atypical absence seizures are similar to absence seizures but last longer and are more difficult to control.

Partial (focal) seizures

Partial (focal) seizures involve abnormal electrical activity in only a part of the brain. They can be further divided into simple partial seizures, which do not affect consciousness, and complex partial seizures, which do. Simple partial seizures are characterized by abnormal electrical activity in a specific part of the brain, which can cause sensory changes, motor symptoms, or autonomic symptoms. Complex partial seizures are characterized by abnormal electrical activity in a specific part of the brain, which can cause a loss of consciousness and abnormal behaviors.

Diagnosing and treating epilepsy

The diagnosis of epilepsy is based on a detailed history of the patient's seizures, a physical examination, and an EEG. The EEG is a test that measures the electrical activity of the brain. It can help to identify abnormal electrical activity that is characteristic of epilepsy. Treatment of epilepsy is usually with anti-epileptic drugs (AEDs). These drugs help to control the abnormal electrical activity in the brain and prevent seizures. In some cases, surgery may be used to remove the part of the brain that is causing the seizures.

Managing your epilepsy

It is important to take your AEDs as prescribed and to avoid triggers that can cause seizures. Triggers include stress, lack of sleep, alcohol, and flashing lights. It is also important to avoid driving until you have been seizure-free for a certain period of time. Regular follow-up with your doctor is important to monitor your seizure activity and adjust your treatment as needed.
