The Keyes papers* Roger John Brownlow Lord Keyes, Paul G. Halpern, 1972 The Keyes Papers Paul G. Halpern, 2019-04-24 The start of Volume III 1939-1945 finds Keyes in a frustrating position Too young for fleet command in the First World War he was now too old for command in the Second World War Keyes's temperament did not allow him to suffer in silence His criticisms of the Naval Staff and implicitly of the government reached another climax with his celebrated speech in the debate in the House of Commons in May 1940 which helped to bring down the Chamberlain government On 17 July 1940 Keyes was appointed Director of Combined Operations and he set to work to build up an organization Immediately this organization was at odds with both the Royal Navy and the Army as they were competing for the same supplies equipment and manpower He was treated with considerable suspicion personally by the 3 Chiefs of Staff who knew all too well his close connection to Churchill and most of his proposals were ruled out by various planning committees In March 1941 the Commandos carried out a raid on the Lofoten Islands and for much of the summer Keyes was involved in planning a raid on the Grand Canary Island or the Azores Operation Pilgrim This culminated in August in Exercise Leapfrog designed as the dress rehearsal for the operation The mistakes committed during this exercise led directly to Keyes dismissal as DCO and was eventually relieved of his post by Churchill For the second time in the war Keyes was out of a job when he thought he ought to have been running the war He continued to write to all his naval friends and spoke out against the conduct of the war in Parliament Despite his criticisms of the direction of the war Churchill offered Keyes a peerage which he accepted He died on 26th December 1945
