The Story of the Red Cross as Told to the Little Colonel Annie Johnston,2014-09-22 It was in Switzerland in the old town of Geneva The windows of the big hotel dining room looked out on the lake and the Little Colonel sitting at breakfast the morning after their arrival could scarcely eat for watching the scene outside Gay little pleasure boats flashed back and forth on the sparkling water The quay and bridge were thronged with people From open windows down the street came the tinkle of pianos and out on the pier where a party of tourists were crowding on to one of the excursion steamers a band was playing its merriest holiday music Far away in the distance she could see the shining snow crown of Mont Blanc and it gave her an odd feeling as if she were living in a geography lesson to know that she was bounded on one side by the famous Alpine mountain and on the other by the River Rhone whose source she had often traced on the map The sunshine the music and the gay crowds made it seem to Lloyd as if the whole world were out for a holiday and she ate her melon and listened to the plans for the day with the sensation that something very delightful was about to happen Little Colonel at Boarding School
