

The Moon

Earth's natural satellite, the Moon is the nearest celestial body to Earth and the most familiar object in the night sky. It is a spectacular sight when viewed through binoculars or a telescope.

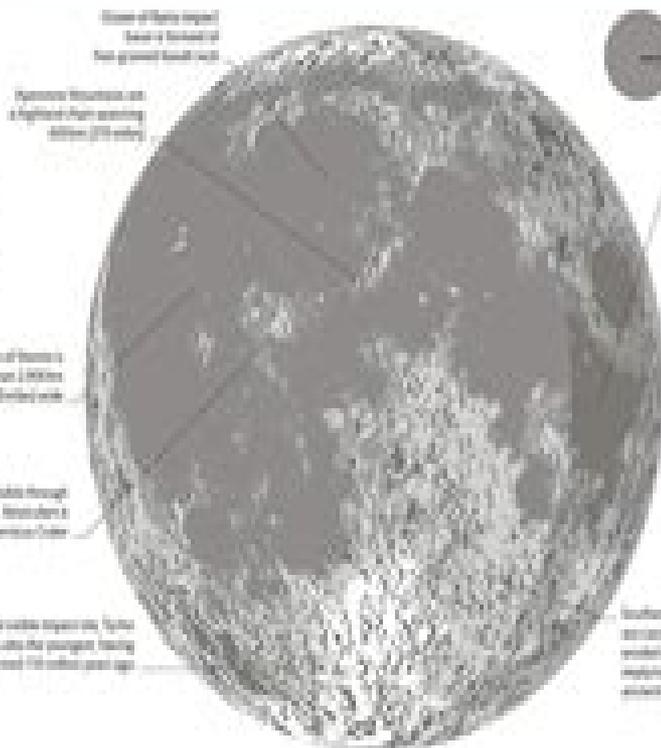

How did the Moon form?

The leading idea explaining the formation of the Moon is called the Giant Impact Hypothesis. The hypothesis suggests that within Earth's first 100 million years it was hit by another planet, of a similar size to Mars, called Theia. After impact, most of the heavy elements from both planets, such as iron and nickel, stayed on Earth to form its heavy core. At the same time, lighter, rockier material was ejected into orbit. Gradually, particles brought some of this debris together to form the Moon.

Surface features

The distinctive lunar surface is dominated by light areas of highland and dark patches called maria (or seas). Maria are smooth, ancient lava plains from the Moon's early volcanoes, now covered with impact craters from asteroids and comets. The distinctive highlands formed as the Moon's magma crust cooled and solidified around 4.5 billion years ago. These features can be seen at their best when the Moon is partially illuminated and shadows show the surface topography.

THE MOON MOVES AWAY FROM EARTH BY 3.8 CM (1.5 IN) EVERY YEAR

Most frequency is where the moon is 100% illuminated.

Less affected by our Earth's heat during formation due to its further distance from Earth.

Dark side highlands are covered in mountain ranges, including ancient surface.

The dark side of the Moon!
Contrary to popular belief, there is not permanently "dark side" on the Moon. The back of the Moon - properly called the "far side" - is not visible from Earth, but it often experiences moonlight.

HOW MANY ASTRONAUTS HAVE WALKED ON THE MOON?

So far, a total of 12 astronauts have walked on the Moon. All have travelled on NASA missions and stepped on the Moon between 1969 and 1972.

LUNAR ECLIPSE

Lunar eclipses occur when the Moon enters the shadow of Earth. They are visible anywhere on Earth when the Moon is risen and usually appear at least twice per year. At total lunar eclipses, indirect sunlight, bent through Earth's atmosphere, turns the Moon an eerie red color. Partial lunar eclipses are also possible when the Moon moves through Earth's outer, penumbral shadow.
