Urban Expansion and Food Security in New Zealand Benjamin Felix Richardson, 2023-08-21 This book examines suburban development in New Zealand and its conflict with and impact on local horticulture and food security Drawing on an ethnographic study of Auckland's rapidly expanding urban periphery combined with comparative case studies from California in the USA and Victoria in Australia the book examines how the profit making strategies of property developers and landowners drastically reshapes work and life at the edge of cities With a significant portion of the world s croplands lying adjacent to cities the accelerating pace of urban sprawl across the planet places unprecedented pressure on the productivity and even existence of these vital food bowl regions The book examines how the demand for more land for development at the urban periphery collides with concerns over local food security and the protection of ecosystem services It analyses land use policy historical records and physical patterns of development alongside participant observation of local events It combines this with interviews with government officials property developers landowners local residents and horticulturists By combining these narratives of the hectic and lucrative business of suburban property development with the collapse of local horticulture this book shows how the realignment of the New Zealand s interests of financial profitability over other concerns led to the transformation of urban peripheries from a productive food bowl to an investment vehicle This book will be of great interest to students and scholars of urban food and agriculture urban planning and development and rural urban studies
