Tuberculosis: an international perspective

Dermot Maher MBChB, Medical Officer
Paul Nunn FRCP, Chief
Tuberculosis Research Unit, Global Tuberculosis Programme, World Health Organization, Geneva

This article summarises a comprehensive review¹ of the global tuberculosis (TB) epidemic and the impact of the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV)². There is also a brief description of the World Health Organization (WHO) recommended TB control strategy, an update on the current status of TB control worldwide, and a look at future prospects for global TB control. An accompanying article by Drobniewski covers the increasingly important issue of drug resistance.

The global tuberculosis burden: notifications and estimates

Case notifications often represent only a fraction of the true incident cases, particularly in those developing countries where access to effective TB care is limited. WHO estimates of incidence² are derived:

- for developing countries, from the annual risk of TB infection
- for low prevalence, industrialised countries, from notification data.

The impact of HIV on tuberculosis

HIV is the most important risk factor for progression of Mycobacterium tuberculosis infection to clinical disease³. WHO estimated that 30.6 million people were living with HIV infection worldwide at the end of 1997, 20.8 million (68%) of them in sub-Saharan Africa⁴. The HIV pandemic has magnified the TB epidemic where there is overlap between M. tuberculosis and HIV-infected populations.

Using estimates of the prevalence of *M. tuberculosis*⁵ and HIV infections⁶ in various regions, WHO has estimated that at the end of 1997 there were about 15 million persons with M. tuberculosis and HIV co-infection worldwide, of whom the great majority were in sub-Saharan Africa (12 million) and most of the rest in South-East Asia (3 million). These estimates are likely to be conservative because the risks of infection with M. tuberculosis and HIV were assumed to be independent, but it is likely that they share common risk factors. The annual risk of progression to TB among persons infected with both HIV and M. tuberculosis is 5–15%, depending on the degree of immunocompromise^{7–10}, compared with an estimated 10% lifetime risk in persons infected with M. tuberculosis alone.

Many countries in Eastern and Southern Africa (eg Uganda, Malawi, Zambia and Tanzania) have reported nationwide HIV seroprevalence rates among new TB patients of at least 30%¹¹. In Asia, Northern Thailand^{12,13} and certain urban areas of India¹⁴ have reported rapidly-increasing HIV seroprevalence rates among TB patients. The number of reported cases of TB has increased dramatically since the 1980s in areas where HIV seroprevalence has increased among TB patients. The increased number of cases poses a challenge to health services, TB control programmes and clinicians¹⁵. Tables 1 and 2 show estimated TB incidence and deaths respectively, including those attributable to HIV¹⁶.

Studies in various regions have shown that about 25% of patients had TB during the course of HIV infection in Latin America¹⁷, Mexico¹⁸ and Haiti¹⁹.
