

Tudor Social Hierarchy

Tudor England was a religious society. People believed that God had power over everything and even the monarch was appointed by God.

GOD

The monarch ruled the country and had the final say over laws, wars and finances. Tudor monarchs believed they had been given the 'Divine Right' to rule.

Monarch

The gentry were the big landowners of Tudor England. The land gave them great wealth.

Nobility

The nobility were part of the wider royal family or those with titles such as earls and lords.

Gentry

Tenant farmers did not own any land but rented it from the yeomen. They managed the workers on the land and lived a pleasant life.

Yeomen

Yeomen were smaller landowners who rented out their land to others. They often owned large estates.

Tenant Farmers

Vagrants (or vagabonds) were unemployed. They wandered between villages and towns in search of work. Many had to beg or steal to survive.

Labouring Poor

The labouring poor rented their land from the tenant farmers. They did the most physical, hard work on the land.
