

Protecting Children from Predictable Crises

Reducing the impacts of predictable crises on children is everyone's business. By planning in advance and acting early, we can protect children's rights to survive, learn and be protected as well as the right to participate in decisions that impact them.

A Child-Centered Approach to Anticipatory Action

In parts of the world most vulnerable to predictable and recurrent crises, children can make up nearly 50% of the population. Children experience disaster differently to adults and have valuable experience and insight into the risks they face. Children also have an important role in supporting and sustaining community level action around disaster risk. Yet, Disaster Risk Management approaches are rarely designed with children at the forefront.

Child centered anticipatory action means ensuring that children's voices are at the heart of every decision and also including children in the decisions and plans that impact them. By engaging children, we can identify the hazards most likely to affect their lives and collaborate on effective ways to address these risks. This not only prepares children for current and future challenges but also strengthens the resilience of entire communities.

Principles for Anticipatory Action

- 1. Child-Centered Decision Making: Children actively participate in identifying the risks they face and determining the most effective solutions. Their involvement ensures that Anticipatory Action is inclusive and tailored to the realities they experience.
- 2. Localisation and Accountability: Communities, including children, are often the first to respond to early warning signs. We equip local actors with the resources and knowledge to take timely action. This ensures children and communities are empowered to respond quickly and flexibly when needed.
- 3. Continuous Learning and Innovation: We constantly learn from our work, our partners,
