Councillors opposed plan to raze 123-year-old Philpott church

Developer says two 30-story towers will provide 'badly needed housing'

TELAN MOSE
REPORTER

City councillors are opposed to a developer's plan to demolish a 123-year-old church to make way for residential towers.

Instead, they've told city staff to leave intact the city's oldest preserved brick building, located on Church St. The developer, under previous heritage approvals, proposed to build two 30-story residential towers with roughly 700 residential units and commercial space on the property across from FirstOntario Centre.

A plan that doesn't involve razing the church would cut the historic complex in half, Stephen Armstrong, a consultant representing the developer, told councillors Monday.

"We're providing badly needed housing in an area that needs it," he said.

City councillors have approved a developer's plan to demolish St. Philip's Church to make way for two 30-story towers.

Officials staying quiet on security incident

Unclear when problem will be resolved; expert says task is complex

Hamilton city officials remain tight-lipped about a cybersecurity incident that could affect a number of municipal systems — including the city's public library system — in several operations and the public library website — www.hamilton.ca.

The city initially announced service disruptions Monday and the next week it began to say it was investigating the situation. Experts were responding to the "cybersecurity incident" that occurred at the end of the week and the city said it had identified several impacted systems.

"Our priority is to safeguard the confidentiality of our systems and protect our citizens and partners' information," the mayor said.

The city stopped the transportation department from releasing information about the incident, but it was not clear when the problem would be resolved. The city said it was working to resolve the issue as quickly as possible.

The city's digital services department is investigating the incident. The city's digital services department is investigating the incident. The city's digital services department is investigating the incident.
