

Frank Conroy's Childhood in His “Stop-Time” Memoir

Topic: Literature | Words: 918 | Pages: 4

Introduction

“Stop-time” is a memoir which was written by an American author by the name; Frank Conroy. The book tells Conroy’s childhood experiences while growing up between Florida and New York was published in 1967. Conroy’s story can be related to contemporary times where thousands of American children go through a lot of emotional turmoil. (Conroy120)

This essay would consider one of the stops in Frank Conroy’s life which would be a personal life occurrence. Furthermore, the essay would highlight why such a stop is significant. Lastly, the concluding part of the essay would include what i would write if i was to write a memoir.

A significant personal life occurrence

According to the United Nations, a child has a right to live. Therefore, parents owe their children an obligation to raise them properly. In most cases where children lack parental support, it affects them psychologically and sometimes results in children been decedents. In most developed countries of the world, the government has infrastructure and programs meant to cater to children with irresponsible parents. (Conroy, 139)

It is important to note that the aforementioned scenario of government assisting parents is a thing of today’s world and not in the 40s when Frank Conroy grew up. This memoir is educative and can serve as a motivational guide to decedent youths. The adolescent stage is a very
