Having been born and reared in an Indian community I at an early age acquired a thorough knowledge of the Sioux language and having lived on Indian reservations for the past forty years in a position which brought me very near to the Indians whose confidence I possessed I have therefore had exceptional opportunities of learning the legends and folk lore of the Sioux The stories contained in this little volume were told me by the older men and women of the Sioux of which I made careful notes as related knowing that if not recorded these fairy tales would be lost to posterity by the passing of the primitive Indian The notes of a song or a strain of music coming to us through the night not only give us pleasure by the melody they bring but also give us knowledge of the character of the singer or of the instrument from which they proceed There is something in the music which unerringly tells us of its source I believe musicians call it the timbre of the sound It is independent of and different from both pitch and rhythm it is the texture of the music itself The timbre of a people s stories tells of the qualities of that people s heart It is the texture of the thought independent of its form or fashioning which tells the quality of the mind from which it springs In the timbre of these stories of the Sioux told in the lodges and at the camp fires of the past and by the firesides of the Dakotas of today we recognize the very texture of the thought of a simple grave and sincere people living in intimate contact and friendship with the big out of doors that we call Nature a race not yet understanding all things not proud and boastful but honest and childlike and fair a simple sincere and gravely thoughtful people willing to believe that there may be in even the everyday things of life something not yet fully understood a race that can without any loss of native dignity gravely consider the simplest things seeking to fathom their meaning and to learn their lesson equally without vain glorious boasting and trifling cynicism an earnest thoughtful dignified but simple and primitive people To the children of any race these stories can not fail to give pleasure by their vivid imaging of the simple things and creatures of the great out of doors and the epics of their doings They will also give an intimate insight into the mentality of an interesting race at a most interesting stage of development which is now fast receding into the mists of the past
