Colloquium, 2005-06-30 IAU C196 coincided with the 8 June 2004 transit of Venus producing the exciting eclectic mix that can be found in these proceedings the amazing history of the English North country astronomers of the seventeenth century the AU at a precision of 1.4 m the explanation for the infamous black drop effect a possible Mayan observation of a transit of Venus in the thirteenth century the vexed question of leap seconds and time scales history distances parallaxes the solar system at exquisite precision and future space missions that will revolutionise astronomy Transits of Venus, from the first observed A.D.1639 to the transit of A.D.2012 Richard Anthony Proctor, 1882 Transits of Venus Richard Anthony Proctor, 1874 Transits of Venus Richard Anthony Proctor, 1875 The Transits of Venus, 1874 and 1882 George Biddell Airy, 1868 Transits of Venus Richard Anthony Proctor, 2013-09 This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book without typos from the publisher Not indexed Not illustrated 1875 edition Excerpt CHAPTER III THE TRANSIT OF 1769 The general impression among astronomers after the observations of 1761 had been discussed was that too much reliance had been placed on Delisle's method Experience wrote J D Cassini later in his Histoire du Passage de 1769 is our chief instructor the fruit of its lessons indemnifies us for the value of the years they cost us The principal end had been missed in 1761 for want of observations in places where the durations differed sufficiently It was essential not to experience a second time the same disadvantage Among the first statements published respecting the transit of 1769 was that by the ingenious Ferguson who wrote as follows in 1762 On the 3rd of June in the year 1769 Venus will again pass over the sun's disc in such a manner as to afford a much easier and better method of investigating the sun's parallax than her transit in the year 1761 has done But no part of Britain will be proper for observing that transit 1 so as to deduce anything with respect to the sun's parallax from it because it will begin but a little before sunset and will be quite over before two o'clock next morning The apparent time of conjunction of the sun and Venus according to Dr Halley's tables will be at thirteen minutes past ten o'clock at London at which time the geocentric latitude of Venus will be full ten minutes of a degree north from the sun's centre and therefore as seen from the northern parts of the earth Venus will be considerably depressed by a parallax of latitude on the sun's disc on which account the visible duration of the transit will be lengthened and in the southern parts of the earth she will be elevated by a parallax of latitude on the sun which will shorten The transits of Venus : a study of eighteenth-century science Harry Woolf,1959 Monthly Reference Lists Providence Public Library (R.I.),1881 Transits of Venus Richard Anthony Proctor,2015-02-08 This work has been selected by scholars as being culturally important and is part of the knowledge base of civilization as we know it This work was reproduced from the original artifact and remains as true to the original work as possible Therefore you will see the original copyright references library stamps as most of these works have been housed in our most important libraries around the world and other notations in the work This work is in the public domain in the United States of America and possibly other nations Within the United States you may freely copy and distribute this work as no entity individual or corporate has a copyright on the body of the work As a reproduction of a historical artifact this work may contain missing or blurred pages poor pictures errant marks etc Scholars believe and we concur that this work is important enough to be preserved reproduced and made generally available to the public We appreciate your support of the preservation process and thank you for being an important part of keeping this knowledge alive and relevant *Transits of Venus.
