Cases decided in the United States Court of Claims ,1885 Unlocking the Brain: Volume 2: Consciousness Georg Northoff,2013-11-11 Neuroscience has made considerable progress in figuring out how the brain works We know much about the molecular genetic and biochemical underpinnings of sensory and motor functions Recent neuroimaging work has opened the door to investigating the neural underpinnings of higher order cognitive functions such as memory attention and even free will In these types of investigations researchers apply specific stimuli to induce neural activity in the brain and look for the function in question However there may be more to the brain and its neuronal states than the changes in activity we induce by applying particular external stimuli In Volume 2 of Unlocking the Brain Georg Northoff addresses consciousness by hypothesizing about the relationship between particular neuronal mechanisms and the various phenomenal features of consciousness Northoff puts consciousness in the context of the resting state of the brain thereby delivering a new point of view to the debate that permits very interesting insights into the nature of consciousness Moreover he describes and discusses detailed findings from different branches of neuroscience including single cell data animal data human imaging data and psychiatric findings This yields a unique and novel picture of the brain and will have a major and lasting impact on neuroscientists working in neuroscience psychiatry and related fields Governing the Excluded Alex

Diamond,2026-01-25 An on the ground description of Colombia s peace process as lived by the rural populations most affected by it The Colombian village of Brice o might at first glimpse look like many communities in the rural Global South Many of the people living there rely on small scale farming even as a newly constructed hydroelectric dam threatens traditional livelihoods Yet after decades where Brice o suffered from a bloody conflict the village has more recently become central to the nation s hopes for peace In Governing the Excluded sociologist Alex Diamond shares a closer look at Brice o and offers unique insight not only into the contemporary Colombian state but to how people across the Global South are struggling to maintain rural livelihoods amid economic dispossession Governing the Excluded describes a landmark peace process between the Colombian government and the radical FARC guerrillas from the perspective of Colombian farmers drawing links between economic transformation drug economies and armed conflict Exclusion from global markets for traditional crops like coffee first pushed farmers to grow coca the raw material for cocaine This ushered in an era of violent conflict for control of the illicit economy while farmers continued to be priced out of legal markets In exchange for peace and state protection farmers ultimately agreed to sacrifice profitable coca But with its disappearance they now find themselves dependent on the state for machinery to maintain the roads they need to get legal harvests to market municipal jobs that are the only decent work available and for public resources to subsidize food crops with razor thin profit margins Ongoing economic struggles in the legal sector make the state s newfound authority tenuous as some villagers replant coca abandon the village for uncertain urban futures or join a rearmed guerrilla group Informed by deep ethnographic research and firsthand stories from Brice o residents Governing the Excluded shows that when it comes to the forces driving dispossession be they international corporate megaprojects global food prices or national initiatives to replace coca cultivation state authority goes only so far as its ability to sustain local livelihoods
