The Dalton School Susan F. Semel, 1992 The Dalton School an independent progressive school on the Upper East Side of Manhattan was founded in 1919 by Helen Parkhurst Influenced by educational leaders such as Maria Montessori Frederic Burk Carlton Washburne and John Dewey Helen Parkhurst established a child centered progressive school which attempted to incorporate the notion of a democratic community within the boundaries of an educational program This innovative program became known as The Dalton Plan In this book Susan F Semel tells the story of The Dalton School from its earliest beginnings through the present day Her story traces the history of progressive education within the walls of The Dalton School focusing on the school's heads including Charlotte Durham Donald Barr and Gardner Dunnan During certain periods of the school's history as progressive education waxed and waned in the educational community at large and as educators responded to demands for more content based curriculum The Dalton Plan was modified At other times the school was impervious to the infusion of current educational thought Consequently during some periods of its history The Dalton School was on the cutting edge of educational reform while during others the school swam against the tide of alternative education or neo progressivism to favor a traditional back to basics approach Ultimately Semel uses the original Dalton Plan as a yardstick by which to measure what has happened to progressive education in the larger world While Susan Semel concludes that The Dalton School in its present state is not the same school that Helen Parkhurst founded it still employs an educational program that pays attention to the needs of a multicultural society and reconfirms the spirit of child centered pedagogy as an important concern of the Dalton community
