The New International Encyclopaedia Frank Moore Colby, Talcott Williams, 1917 Goods Trade and International Equity Portfolios Fabrice Collard, 2007 We show that international trade in goods is the main determinant of international equity portfolios and offers a compelling theoretically and empirically resolution of the portfolio home bias puzzle The model implies that investors can achieve full international risk diversification if the share of wealth invested in foreign equity matches their country's degree of openness the imports to GDP share The empirical evidence strongly supports this implication

Poterba, 1991 The benefits of international diversification have been recognized for decades In spite of this most investors hold nearly all of their wealth in domestic assets In this paper we construct new estimates of the international equity portfolio holdings of investors in the U S Japan and Britain More than 98% of the equity portfolio of Japanese investors is held domestically the analogous percentages are 94% for the U S and 82% for Britain We use a simple model of investor preferences and behavior to show that current portfolio patterns imply that investors in each nation expect returns in their domestic equity market to be several hundred basis points higher than returns in other markets This lack of diversification appears to be the result of investor choices rather than institutional constraints Journal of
