The Ranger:

The Ranger's Nightmare: Shadows of Shadowpine Drac Von Stoller, 2024-09-10 Ranger Steve Parker stood at the edge of Shadowpine Overlook his weathered hands gripping the railing as he gazed out over the vast expanse of wilderness Twenty years of service had etched lines into his face but his eyes still held the spark of passion for the untamed beauty of Shadowpine National Park As the sun dipped below the jagged horizon painting the sky in hues of orange and purple Steve couldn't shake the feeling that something was off The usual chorus of crickets and night birds was strangely absent replaced by an oppressive silence that seemed to press in from all sides Just nerves he muttered to himself running a hand through his graying hair You're getting jumpy in your old age Parker But deep down he knew it was more than that In his two decades as a ranger he'd developed a sixth sense for danger an instinct that had saved his life more times than he cared to count And right now that instinct was screaming at him Steve's radio crackled to life startling him All units be advised came the voice of Jenny the night dispatcher We've got reports of strange animal activity in Sector 7 Hikers describing some kind of large unidentified predator Ranger Parker you're closest Can you check it out Copy that dispatch Steve replied his hand instinctively moving to the comforting weight of his sidearm I'm on my way As he climbed into his rugged park vehicle Steve couldn't help but feel a sense of foreboding Sector 7 was deep in the heart of Shadowpine a region so remote and densely forested that even he rarely ventured there Whatever was waiting for him in those dark woods he had a feeling it was going to be a long night The headlights of Steve's vehicle cut through the gathering darkness as he made his way deeper into the forest The rough dirt road twisted and turned branches scraping against the sides of the car like skeletal fingers trying to hold him back As he drove Steve's mind wandered to the stories he'd heard over the years Tales of hikers gone missing of strange lights in the sky of animals found mutilated in ways that defied explanation He'd always dismissed them as campfire stories the kind of urban legends that every national park accumulated over time But now with the unnatural silence pressing in around him and that persistent sense of wrongness gnawing at his gut those stories didn't seem quite so far fetched The radio crackled again Ranger Parker come in Jenny's voice came through tinged with static and was that fear Go ahead dispatch Steve responded slowing the vehicle We've lost contact with Rangers Thompson and Martinez Jenny said her words coming fast and breathless They were responding to another call in Sector 7 but their last transmission was cut off All we heard was screaming Steve's blood ran cold Thompson and Martinez were seasoned rangers not the type to spook easily If something had happened to them I'm almost there he said trying to keep his voice steady I'll find them As if in response to his words a blood curdling howl split the night air It was like nothing Steve had ever heard before part wolf part human and entirely wrong The sound seemed to come from everywhere at once echoing through the trees and reverberating in his bones Steve slammed on the brakes the vehicle skidding to a halt on the dirt road His heart pounded in his chest as he peered out into the darkness straining to see any sign of movement among the trees For a long moment everything was still Then just at the edge of his headlights reach something moved. A shape tall and impossibly thin stepped out onto the road. As it turned to face him, Steve caught a glimpse of glowing eyes and a mouth full of needle sharp teeth. Oh God, he whispered, fumbling for his radio. Dispatch, we've got a situation here. I need backup now. But there was no response. Only static filled the air. The creature took a step toward the vehicle, its form seeming to ripple and shift in the harsh glare of the headlights. Steve's training kicked in and he threw the car into reverse, tires spinning as he tried to put distance between himself and the thing on the road. As he backed up, more shapes emerged from the forest. Dozens of them, each more nightmarish than the last. Some looked almost human, while others were twisted amalgamations of different animals. All of them moved with a predatory grace that sent chills down Steve's spine. In that moment as he stared into the soulless eyes of the creatures advancing on his vehicle, Steve Parker realized that every horror story he'd ever heard about Shadowpine was true. And he was living in one. Steve's tires screeched as he spun the vehicle around, his knuckles white on the steering wheel as he floored the accelerator. The engine roared and he shot down the dirt road, tree branches whipping past the windows. In his rearview mirror, he could see the creatures giving chase. They moved with impossible speed, bounding through the forest on all fours, their eyes glowing like hellish coals in the darkness. Come on, come on, Steve muttered, pushing the vehicle to its limits. He knew these roads better than anyone, but in the pitch black of night, every turn was a gamble. Suddenly, something massive slammed into the side of the car. The impact sent Steve spinning, tires losing traction on the loose gravel. He fought for control, but it was too late. The vehicle careened off the road, plowing through the underbrush before coming to a violent stop against a large oak tree. Dazed and bleeding from a cut on his forehead, Steve fumbled with his seatbelt. He could hear them out there, moving through the woods, getting closer. With shaking hands, he grabbed his flashlight and sidearm, then kicked open the door and stumbled out into the forest. The night air was thick with an unnatural fog that seemed to cling to everything, muffling sounds and limiting visibility to just a few feet. Steve's breath came in ragged gasps as he ran, branches tearing at his uniform and undergrowth tangling around his feet.
