students recognises the incident she will not resent being made to serve the good cause even in the unattractive guise of a warning example A few members of the class had prepared the story of The Fisherman and his Wife The first girl called on was evidently inclined to feel that it was rather a foolish story She tried to tell it well but there were parts of it which produced in her the touch of shamefacedness to which I have referred When she came to the rhyme O man of the sea come listen to me For Alice my wife the plague of my life Has sent me to beg a boon of thee she said it rather rapidly At the first repetition she said it still more rapidly the next time she came to the jingle she said it so fast and so low that it was unintelligible and the next recurrence was too much for her With a blush and a hesitating smile she said And he said that same thing you know Of course everybody laughed and of course the thread of interest and illusion was hopelessly broken for everybody Now anyone who chanced to hear Miss Shedlock tell that same story will remember that the absurd rhyme gave great opportunity for expression in its very repetition each time that the fisherman came to the water s edge his chagrin and unwillingness were greater and his summons to the magic fish mirrored his feeling The jingle is foolish that is a part of the charm But if the person who tells it feels foolish there is no charm at all
