

Behavioural Traps - Time Delay Traps

For example if we offer a person who likes apples a choice between receiving one apple today or receiving two apples in a month, that person may choose the apple today because

- (a) the future apples are discounted such that they are worth subjectively less as a result of the delay,
- (b) the person does not trust us to deliver the apples in a month,
- (c) arranging to obtain the two apples in a month might be costly or inconvenient, thereby offsetting the value of the additional apple.
