The Verb "Be" in Ancient Greek, By Charles H. Kahn Charles Harry Kahn, John W. M. Verhaar (Ed), 1973 The Verb "be" in Ancient Greek, 1973 The Verb "be" in Ancient Greek Charles H. Kahn, 1973 A reprint with new introductory essay of the D Reidel edition of 1973 This reissue of Charles Kahn's classic work includes a substantial new introductory essay which presents a reformulation of the theory of syntactic and semantic unity for the system of uses of the verb be in Greek conceived primarily as a verb of predication and hence a defense of the conceptual unity for the notion of Being in Greek philosophy The book offers a systematic description of the use and grammar of the verb to be in Ancient Greek before the philosophers took it over to express the central concepts in Greek logic and metaphysics Evidence is taken primarily from Homer but supplemented by specimens from classical Attic prose Topics discussed include the original status of the verb in Indo-European as well as the logical and syntactic relations among copula existential and veridical uses The Verb "be" in Ancient Greek Charles H. Propositional Perception Jeffrey Barnouw, 2002 The early Greek Stoics were the first philosophers to recognize the object of normal human perception as predicative or propositional in nature Fundamentally we do not perceive qualities or things but situations and things happening facts To mark their difference from Plato and Aristotle the Stoics adopted phantasia as their word for perception This term had been coined by Plato to designate deceptive appearance a combination of sensation and judgment and the Stoics turned this sense to positive account by linking it to the ground breaking work of Plato and Aristotle on predication the framing of propositions To corner the Sophist in his Sophist Plato had argued that phantasia was of the nature of judgment and statement capable of truth and falsity The Stoics made phantasia or propositional perception the starting point and basis for their propositional logic and showed that the revealing power of perception is carried over in the formation of logical propositions and the interrelation of propositions in signs and proof Author Jeffrey Barnouw proposes new interpretations and translations for other characteristic Stoic terms in addition to phantasia including lekton pragma axioma huparchein ptosis tunchanon emphasis endeiktikon and metabasis Barnouw also demonstrates a multi faceted and deep affinity between Stoic logic and the semiotic logic of Charles S Peirce Diachronic, Typological, and Areal Aspects of Converbs Paola Cotticelli-Kurras, Eystein Dahl, Jelena Živojinović, 2024-12-30 This book deals with the category of converbs whose denomination refers to a set of structures which cross linguistically are not comparable Specifically we tackle the following topics 1 converbs and related constructions as areal features distinguishing between a general coordinating and subordinating type of converb 2 converbs in the context of linguistic families particularly in the Indo European domain displaying different non finite structures to express the adverbial domain 3 converbial constructions and competing construction types 4 the diachronic typology of converbs and their source constructions
