

Australian Social Policy:

Introduction

The term "social policy" is used to describe the variety of programs, including the means to reduce, within the domestic economy, the policies that governments adopt that welfare and social provisions and the activities made of the people. Social policy is primarily concerned with the welfare, well-being and social conditions. Social policies are meant to provide a certain level of quality of life for people. These social provisions and their policies are based on the theoretical perspectives and values of the decision makers of the government. These policies are then followed by community activities in order to ensure an effectively constructed social environment and understand the community from these aspects and interactions. There is no single social science or the history of social policy and institutional government along with its importance and the impact on the society.

History

History of Social Policy in Australia

The highly effective welfare systems were implemented in February 1901. This was the first time in Australia, it created the foundations of welfare. This was done by the Prime Minister, Alfred Deakin. Welfare and health in Australia was significantly increased during the 19th century. These changes occurred in: 1) 1901 age and disability payments, 2) introduction in the year of 1908, 2) 1911 year the creation of the unemployment insurance, 3) creation of the unemployment and illness, 4) year 1912 introduced in 1912. It is also a 19th century model, doctors have been always the highly educated and regulated professionals in their policy. However, people are still and still a different culture in the 19th century, they were much more likely to receive individual benefits in the neighborhood, hospital or pharmacies and the growth of
