which provide a person's reasons for doing what they do lie at the heart of intentional action and social cognition. According to this view, typically what people do is a rational response to the reasons they have: I open the cookie jar because I'd like a cookie and believe there is one in there. As a corollary, understanding someone else's actions is held to depend on attributing them plausible mental states and reasoning: I think you opened the cookie jar because you wanted a cookie and believed there was one in there. This reason-responsive understanding of action lies at the heart of crucial social notions like agency and responsibility. However, it has been thrown into doubt by experimental findings which apparently show that the common sense appeal to reasons and reasoning is overly demanding and overly intellectualising, painting an idealised picture of decision making which is rarely borne out by the evidence. If we get out of our armchairs and examine how people actually make decisions, the claim is what we find is that people don't do what they do typically based on the reasons they have. Instead, people are swayed by biases and flaws in their reasoning systems using cognitive heuristics, intuitive gut feel decision making processes which bypass the proper consultation of reasons. Furthermore, if we look at how animals, infants and adults under time or other pressures understand the actions of others, what we find is that they appeal to simpler systems, e.g. looking only at environmental factors and overt behaviour, providing a route to action, understanding that circumvents attribution of reasons and reasoning. In short, then, experimental findings show that common sense psychology is wrong. This book is an attempt to reject that line of argument and defend the common sense perspective, vindicating the core philosophical idea that in the typical case, people do what they do for the reasons they have.

Spiders, Scorpions, Centipedes and Mites J. L. Cloudsley-Thompson, 2015-05-11 Spiders, Scorpions, Centipedes and Mites provides information pertinent to different species of insects including woodlice, millipedes, centipedes, scorpions and spiders. This book presents the complexity of factors influencing the distribution and ecology of animals. Organized into 11 chapters, this book starts with an overview of the characteristics and different adaptations to life on land of woodlice. This text then provides information on the structural characteristics of the different orders of millipedes including Oniscomorpha, Limacomorpha and Colobognatha. Other chapters consider the biology of centipedes, wherein the body is divided into a variable number of somites, each of which is provided with a pair of limbs used for locomotion. This book discusses as well the large pedipalp furnished with stout chelae, which is the most striking feature of spiders. The final chapter deals with the stages in the development of mites. This book is a valuable resource for zoologists, upper school biology teachers and university students.
