

IN CONGRESS, July 4, 1776.

The unanimous Declaration of the thirteen united States of America

When in the course of human events it becomes necessary for mankind to declare the political bond which has connected them with another, and when the powers of the earth, separated and united, have been the cause of a long train of abuses and usurpations, which have endeavored to destroy the rights of the Colonies, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that the Declaration should be published in the world, that the whole of the Colonies might unite in a support of it, and that the King, States, and People, might be apprized of the true nature of the grievances, and that the Colonies might be enabled to take effectual measures for their relief.

That the United States in General, and every one of the said Colonies in Particular, do hereby declare, that the said King, States, and People, have violated the said rights, and that they are entitled to a full and complete redress of the same.

That the said King, States, and People, have refused to receive the said Colonies into the protection of their laws, and to afford them the benefits of their justice, and that they have endeavored to bring them under the absolute and uncontrolled power of the King of Great Britain, and to subject them to the arbitrary and oppressive dominion of the said King, States, and People, and to deprive them of the rights and liberties which they are entitled to as free and independent States.

That the said King, States, and People, have endeavored to establish a tyrannical and oppressive government over the said Colonies, and to subject them to the arbitrary and oppressive dominion of the said King, States, and People, and to deprive them of the rights and liberties which they are entitled to as free and independent States.

That the said King, States, and People, have endeavored to establish a tyrannical and oppressive government over the said Colonies, and to subject them to the arbitrary and oppressive dominion of the said King, States, and People, and to deprive them of the rights and liberties which they are entitled to as free and independent States.
