Conscious and Unconscious Consumer Choice of Food Products Florian Schleicher, 2013-12-09 Master s Thesis from the year 2013 in the subject Psychology Work Business Organisation grade 2 3 Technical University of Munich language English abstract When going for grocery shopping some consumers make up their minds about what to buy and write down shopping lists Others just go into the supermarket and do not really think beforehand about the things they need Although in both situations individuals engage in different ways of decision making on the purchase of groceries when coming home and putting things into the shelve they positively or negatively assess the things they bought Whereas in some situations one gets a positive feeling because e g s he purchased all the products on the shopping list In another situation a consumer might end up being bored because s he just bought the groceries which are perceived as useful and did not listen to his her inner voice calling for more than just the fulfillment of utilitarian needs Generally consumers can consciously do their purchases and decide for products after thinking on it or can consider a product s attributes and let their intuition decide In the interest of the consumer the question emerges how the consumer decides at best Does a consumer receive greater satisfaction from consciously elaborating about the products s he is facing or is it better not to think consciously when facing product choices This question is differently assessed by different models on decision making Whereas some authors Ajzen 2011 Bandura 1986 1997 Deci Payne et al 1993 emphasize consciousness in decision making there is also a large number of proponents of unconscious thought Dijksterhuis 2004 Dijksterhuis et al 2005 2006a 2006b 2006c Levine 1996 Bargh 2002 and Wilson et al 1993 Dijksterhuis and Nordgren 2006b p 96 argue for the superiority of unconscious decision making by mentioning that conscious thought is constrained by the low capacity of consciousness which results in sub optimal choices With regard to food products this general superiority of unconscious thought is highly questionable On the one hand consumers constrain themselves in taking into account only specific products which respect certain criteria as e g with diabetics and food products with less sugar content On the other hand food products are also bought because consumers want to confirm their conscience by purchasing e g fair trade products which among other things are associated with a fair payment of farmers

Theories of Choice Stefan Grundmann,Philipp Hacker,2021-01-14 Choice is a key concept of our time It is a foundational mechanism for every legal order in societies that are politically constituted as democracies and economically built on the market mechanism Thus choice can be understood as an atomic structure that grounds core societal processes In recent years however the debate over the right way to theorize choice for example as a rational or a behavioral type of decision making has intensified This collection provides an in depth discussion of the promises and perils of specific types of theories of choice It shows how the selection of a specific theory of choice can make a difference for concrete legal questions in particular in the regulation of the digital economy or in choosing between market firm or network In its first part the volume provides an accessible overview of the current debates about rational versus behavioral approaches to theories of choice The remainder of the book structures the vast landscape of theories of choice along with three main types individual collective and organizational decision making As theories of choice proliferate and become ever more sophisticated however the process of choosing an adequate theory of choice becomes increasingly intricate This volume addresses this selection problem for the various legal arenas in which individual organizational and collective decisions matter By drawing on economic technological political and legal points of view the volume shows which theories of choice are at the disposal of the legally relevant decision maker and how they can be operationalized for the solution of concrete legal problems The editors acknowledge the kind support of the Fritz Thyssen Foundation for an exploratory conference on the subject of the book
