Review:

The new 100 km Ottawa Valley Rail Trail (OVRT) will be the longest rail trail in Ontario when finished. What was once a CP rail line running up the Ottawa Valley and now is now being re-used as a very long recreational trail.

It starts just above Smith Falls at the south end and runs northwest through many old towns in the Ottawa Valley to Arnprior, where it meets the Ottawa River. Then this rail trail follows the roughly waterway till all the way to Mattawa. Now, that is almost to North Bay!

I am happy to announce that the southern half of the trail is ready for you to explore this summer. The northern half, from Petawawa to Mattawa, is still being re-surfaced and may need to be finished by 2020, they say.

We had a chance to ride two sections. First, we sampled the Petawawa to Petawawa section (what the Algonquin Trail) highlights are the old bridge crossings in town and the shoreline views in Petawawa.

The trail continues south through Carleton and Renfrew before meeting the Ottawa River again near Arnprior.

Then, further south in farm country, we ride the Lennox County section through the towns of Petawawa, Altonville (Moosehide Mills), and Carleton Place. There are old mining rail stops along the Message River (yes, another one).

Quiet, historic downtown streets with antique shops and we expect vendors can give you a reason to stop for a while and are the most interesting part of the trail.

The countryside in this very wide valley is flat farmland. As such, sections of the trail run relatively straight between towns. Views are of crops in farm fields and sometimes fields not obscured by trees and tall shrubs. We had little shade on our holiday ride.

This rail trail path has a nice base of fine crushed gravel, which will still be ready for a few years until it compacts. Finished areas had just large gravel for patches where it's only this large. We had to watch out for these rocky patches. Otherwise, the going is easy for a great bike or MTB.

This path allows ATVs, so take a few pads as closely with no issues, then we walked for the dust to settle. Snowmobiles are also allowed but were not much of an issue on our sunny July weekend.

I am glad to see this trail open up to create long distance trail riders and hikers here to connect with other rail trails. The route runs north Ottawa via the Carleton RT from Carleton Place or get to the StP RT of Smith Falls or continue onto the Carleton RT at Smith Falls. This route opens up more possibilities.

When finished, the 100 km stretch from north of Petawawa heads back into the bush for a long and solitary ride before entering near Britannia Park where one could camp. (Check there is the last good supply store at the proposed end of the line.)

After Britannia, the RT will meet the river again, sharing views of the main city (Quebec, lots and lots of a few towns). Then it will go inland through a narrow valley after crossing the iron bridge at South Creek. By Snow Sheds, the RT will hug the river again for 20 km. That should make the night better than a number of winter trails.

You will be happy to find a good meal and a bed when you reach Mattawa. And if you're not done yet, you will have to enjoy the wilderness of Ontario (and the long bugs) overnight. A journey like the voyageurs had, pushing themselves up on the rugged Ottawa to rest in Mattawa before moving on to North Bay.

This cycling trail will continue to become popular, as it has enough town stops with meals and lodging to service riders' needs in the south. And the northern half will give those hikers a chance to enjoy a dose of wilderness plenty to take in.

When areas get finished resurfacing the railbed and adding new parking lots, signs, benches, and other bits, it will be a joy to ride – and a long way to work.
