The Last Frontiers On Earth:

The New Frontiers of Freedom, In Barbary, The Last Frontier and Where the Strange Trails Go Down Edward Alexander Powell, 2020-09-28

The wander thirst is like the drug habit Once you acquire it you are done for It will never let you rest There is no mistaking its symptoms a hatred of the prosaic the routine and the humdrum an aversion to staying long in one place an insatiable craving to move on move on to see what lies beyond yonder range of hills around that next bend in the road It is as persistent as it is insidious There comes the stage when you think that you are cured of it You delude yourself into believing that you have had enough of discomforts and privations and that it is high time you settled down and had a home You weigh the respective merits as a place of residence of Long Island and Southern California you even consult an architect and subscribe to House and Garden and Country Life But one day you casually pick up a list of steamer sailings or stumble on your battered luggage plastered over with foreign labels or whiff some exotic smell which brings back memories of the hot lands there is no sense which stimulates the memory like that of smell or see a vessel outward bound or idly open a map whereupon the old craving suddenly grips you like an African fever and almost before you realize it you are on the out trail once again The symptoms usually recur with the approach of winter when the northern days grow short and gloomy when the shop windows are filled with fur coats and mufflers and galoshes when the wind howls mournfully beneath the eaves o nights But the attacks which are hardest to resist come in the early spring when the snow has disappeared and the smell of fresh earth is in the air and the country side is already green in spots That is the time when it is most difficult to control one s restless feet For a quarter of a century the urge of spring had perennially sent me packing to the Far Places But when I came up from Equatoria after a year spent beneath the shadow of the Line I said to myself that I was through with wandering as a vocation that I was going back to my own country and my own people and on an elm shaded street in some tranquil community buy me a long low rambling house a white house with broad hospitable porches and green blinds I had carefully planned it all out on the long African marches or during sleepless nights beneath the Southern Cross I would join the local golf club and amuse myself with my horses and my dogs and my books and keep my house filled with friends over the week ends and even go into politics in a mild way perhaps In fact I proposed to do all the sensible prosaic things for which I had never had the time before But before sailing for America to put these laudable resolutions into effect I met at a Paris dinner table the gentleman who was at that time charged with the conduct of France s colonial affairs We had much in common it developed for he too had been on those distant seaboard of the world where the Gallic empire builders are creating a new and greater France Lingered over the coffee and cigars we talked shop the future of Indo China Madagascar s need of harbors Miquelon and its fisheries the Syrian mandate the control of sleeping sickness in the Congo cotton growing in the country round Lake Tchad Why don t you round out your survey of our possessions the minister suggested by taking a look at what we ve accomplished in North Africa The North African tour I asked laughing Algiers Constantine and Tunis with a side trip to the Garden of Allah Thank you no After what I ve seen I m afraid that I d find that sort of thing pretty tame Besides I ve already been to North Africa any number of times I once spent a winter in Tunisia and Algeria and I was in Morocco back in the bad old days when unsuccessful pretenders to the Shereefian throne were carried about the country in iron cages lashed to the backs of camels I ll wager that I can name some places in North Africa that you haven t seen the tempter said persuasively How about a visit to Djerba the island of the lotus eaters you know and the desert sky scrapers of Medenine and the troglodyte dwellings of the Matmata Plateau Then you could push down into the Sahara cross the sand dunes of the Grand Erg by twelve wheeler to Ouargla and Ghardaia keep on to the Figuig Oasis and so over the Atlas into Morocco Yes I remarked speculatively if I were going to do it at all I should certainly include Morocco There are some parts of it which I have never seen and it has rather worried me I ve always had a hankering to have a look at some of those kasbahs in the High Atlas where the grand ca ds live like the marauding barons of the Middle Ages I am told And while I was about it I should like to get into the forbidden Sus and even to see a bit of Mauretania and the masked Touareg perhaps That can all be arranged quite easily the minister assured me If you decide to go I ll write to Marshal Lyautey who runs the show for us in Morocco and instruct the officers commanding in the Saharan military provinces to give you every assistance Suppose we have a look at the map I suggested half capitulating I could feel the old familiar symptoms coming on already my feet were growing restless We appealed to our host who led us into his library and on the table spread a large scale map labeled Afrique du Nord Fran aise There they lay before me tempting as jewels those glowing lands of sun and sand of Arab Berber and Moor of mosque and minaret Set in the Mediterranean shore line like great fragments of colored mosaic were the Barbary States Tunisia Algeria Morocco Below them sweeping southward to the Great Bend of the Niger and the swamps around Lake Tchad was the yellow expanse of the Sahara crisscrossed with the thin black lines which I knew for caravan routes and sprinkled with the patches of green which stand for palm shaded oases And far to the westward where Africa almost rubs shoulders with South America lay Mauretania land of the Blue Veiled Silent Ones The Forgotten of God Now I maintain that it is as unfair to unroll a map before a man who is striving to overcome the wander thirst as it is to offer cocaine to a reformed drug addict For how I ask you could one be expected to resist the lure of those magic names Kairouan Gafsa Touggourt Ghardaia Laghouat Sidi bel Abb s Oujda Fez Mequinez Mazagan Mogador Agadir At sight of them my resolutions crumbled like Mexican adobe Almost before I realized it my carefully made plans had been tossed into the discard and instead of poring over plans and specifications with an architect I was overhauling my travel gear and ordering riding breeches from my tailor and making inquiries about the sailing dates from Marseilles

The Last Frontier Karl S. Guthke, 2019-05-15 The existence of intelligent extraterrestrial life has been a subject of debate since the dawn of recorded history The Last Frontier originally published in German in 1983 and now available in Helen Atkins s sensitive English translation traces the development of the idea that Earth is not the only planet inhabited by intelligent beings but that there might be a plurality or even an infinity of worlds with human or humanoid life Focusing on the seventeenth to the twentieth century and taking into account theological philosophical scientific popular and literary writings from American British French and German sources Karl S Guthke demonstrates the continuing importance of this question to the process of human self definition
