Bochenski,2013-03-14 Transforming Faith Communities argues for a model of being church that combines congregationalism with a constructive approach to church state relationships Congregationalism within a vision for a renewed Christendom is commended here as a viable option for Christian mission in the twenty first century world In making this case two movements are explored those inspired by sixteenth century Anabaptism and late twentieth century Latin American liberation theology Each movement is held up as a mirror to the other A continuing vision for the transformation of church and society emerges from this book as a number of contemporary resonances begin to sound These include an outline of some likely common features in the development of radical religious communities an examination of some of the factors that create world affirming Christian faith communities and many examples of effective and constructive engagement with church and society across the centuries The World & I ,1988 The Encyclopedea of Christianity, Vol. 5 Erwin Fahlbusch,Geoffrey William Bromiley,1999 Written by leading scholars from around the world the articles in this volume range from sin Sufism and terrorism to theology in the 19th and 20th centuries Vatican I and II and the virgin birth Catholicism Richard P. Stanislaus,1999 Study with reference to Tamil Nadu India The Character of Our Communities Gloria H. Albrecht,1995 The emphasis on rugged individualism which is so thoroughly a part of American culture has come under scrutiny and criticism from a number of sides recently Many have sought to reclaim a sense of community as the source of meaning and value in human life In the theological realm thinkers such as Stanley Hauerwas have asserted that Christian faith is necessarily communitarian in nature These theologians have argued that being a Christian means not simply encountering the divine within the privacy of the individual heart but investing one s loyalty in a particular community of faith leaning its shared narratives and being apprenticed to its specific religious practices Gloria Albrecht who shares this rejection of American hyperindividualism questions whether the communities Hauerwas and others envision are or even can be liberative for those who have been marginalized by the rest of society She applauds the concern that Christians be shaped not by the values of the wider society but by the distinctive stories and perspectives of concrete worshipping communities Yet she asks a trenchant question Who is telling these stories Are they told in such a way as to subvert or support the predominant culture s denigration of certain of its members to second and third class status In spite of their intention to be countercultural

Albrecht contends that the communities which these theologians conceive are in danger of adopting the very hierarchical character that defines the society at large She insists that if our communities are to be the visible signs of the sovereign rule of God they claim to be they must be characterized by inclusiveness and diversity African Christianity Ogbu Kalu,2007 It is ideologically driven to build a group of church historians who will tell the story of African Christianity not Christianity in Africa as an African story by intentionally privileging the patterns of African agency without neglecting the noble roles played by missionaries The effort has been to identify the major themes or story lines in African encounters and in the appropriation of the gospel from publisher description The Politics of Latin American Liberation Theology Richard L.
