is the ability to face the emulation of photovoltaic generators obtained by the design of a suitable equipment in which voltage and current are the same as in a real source This is achieved according to the following steps the source electrical behavior modeling the power converter design including its control for the laboratory emulator This approach allows the reader to cope with the creation of an indoor virtual photovoltaic plant in which the environmental conditions can be imposed by the user for testing real operation including maximum power point tracking partial shading control for the grid or load interfacing etc Photovoltaic Sources is intended to meet the demands of postgraduate level students and should prove useful to professional engineers and researchers dealing with the problems associated with modeling and emulation of photovoltaic sources
