HTML vs XML

HTML	XML
HTML is used to create websites and define how content displays on a screen	XML is used to store and transport data
HTML tags are pre-defined	XML tags can be custom-made to fit specific needs
HTML is more concerned with presentation	XML focuses more on description and organization
HTML files are used to display data	XML files are used to store and transport data
With HTML, some small errors are ignored	With XML, no coding errors are allowed
HTML is case insensitive	XML is case sensitive
HTML does not recognize namespaces, but you can get around this by including a prefix with the object member name or organizing nested objects.	XML offers the benefit of namespaces, which significantly reduces the probability of clashes when incorporating other documents.
